Occupation 3: 1930, Section Boss, Boston & Maine Railroad

Residence 1: 1917, 14 Washington Street, Exeter, NH

Residence 2: 1920, 8 Washington Street, Exeter, NH

Notes for ANTONINA OR ANTOINETTE WSZOLEK:

Possible birthplace - Szymbark, Gorlice, Tarnow, Galicia (Poland)

Came to America on 31-10-1907 aboard the ship "Friedrich der Grosse" which sailed from Bremen, Germany. She said she was sick for the entire trip to America. She came with two friends, Tekla Kieltyka and Ludwika Salsoa (later m. Rajhel). They went to Newmarket, NH. Antonina had either $3 or $30 with her on arrival. She was 4'11" tall at the time with blonde hair and blue eyes. She was passenger #10 on the passenger list page 864 and her name was spelled Wsrolek. She was an Austrian Pole and used to ring the church bell in her church in Poland. They would walk to church barefoot and then put their shoes on before going into church in order to save wear and tear on the shoes because they cost a month's wages.

She worked at a mill in Newmarket, NH and after she moved to Exeter, NH (? After she was married) She was a laborer in the Exeter textile mill. In 1930 she lived with her husband and children, Stanley, Nellie and Mary at 8 Washington Street in Exeter, NH. Antonina never learned to speak English. There was a grocery store across the street run by a Polish couple and many Polish relatives and friends lived nearby so there was no need for her to learn. She kept a pig, chickens and rabbits at 8 Washington Street as well as having a vegetable garden, pear tree and purple and green grape vines. She had a green thumb and grew many Easter lilies. She canned many vegetables and made pickles.

She sent clothing to her brother in Poland and sewed American money (bills) in the linings because American money was worth a lot in Poland at the time. With some of the money, her brother bought a cow.

She sewed only to mend her husbands work pants, but she did crochet. Holidays were celebrated in the old Polish tradition of blessing the food and sharing oplatek. She was a very outspoken woman and her daughter, Mary, took after her.

When she moved in with her daughter Nellie, she like to watch wrestling, especially Killer Kowalski, because he was Polish.

Antoinette (Sopel Collard) remembers her aunt's casket was lined with blue satin and she wore a blue lace dress.

Notes for STANLEY EDWARD "OCZKOWSKI" OAKOWSKY:

Marriage reception was in Haverhill, MA.

When he had his stroke, and was dying, he says he saw a bright white light and God told him it was not time for him to die yet and he would live until he was 90.

He was born in America, went back to Poland with his mother, father and sister Helen at the age of 3. He returned to America at the age of 13. He lived with his grandfather in Poland while his parents went back and forth to America.

Stanley and Helen came back to America on the same passport.

Stanley first appears in the Haverhill City Directory in 1932 as a student and living at 21 Grove Street.

He lived with his wife Mary for 3 months in Portland ME where he worked as a welder and then became a foreman. After 3 months they moved to Old Orchard Beach, ME and stayed there for 6 months. He was then drafted into the Army for a 3 year tour and went to England and worked in the Medical Corp. When the war was over he didn't come home, but stayed one year longer in England because they couldn't find him in their paperwork. He finally came home in December 1946. They then moved to FL because Stanley didn't like the cold.

He became a builder in Florida and built his first house in Jensen Beach, FL.

Tom worked for a high tech company in Boston. In 2002 he and a friend began Appledore Cove:
Tech refugees stake claim for specialty foods in the Seacoast

By Christine Gillette

PORTSMOUTH - They're Portsmouth's answer to The Juice Guys.

Much like Nantucket Nectars, the Massachusetts soft drink company, Appledore Cove's business is based as much on the exuberance of its principals, Jeff Garstka and Tom Gorski, as it is on its line of specialty foods.
Back to Made in the Seacoast

"We're not saving the world but we're making it a little bit tastier maybe," said Gorski.

Both have business degrees - Gorski from the University of New Hampshire, Garstka from the University of Massachusetts - and met while working for a high-tech company in the Boston area. Tired of working in the corporate world, the pair knew they wanted to start a business together.

"After Sept. 11, I just had a new vigor to do something different," said Garstka, a Massachusetts native who now lives in Brentwood.

The trouble was deciding what kind of business.

One day last November when they were sitting in Prescott Park drinking coffee, Gorski recalls, "I said, 'Let's make our own marinara (sauce).' Jeff said, 'That's nuts.'"

But Gorski, who grew up in Exeter and now lives in Portsmouth, didn't give up, using the example of The Juice Guys to help Garstka visualize the potential.

"Ten minutes later, he goes, 'It's not a bad idea,'" Gorski said.

"We decided in 10 minutes we were going to do it," said Garstka. "The next day, we were doing research."

That's included everything from market research, to developing and testing recipes, and learning about federal Food and Drug Administration standards and practices.

While neither had worked directly in the food business - Gorski tends bar part-time at the Portsmouth Brewery - prior to starting Appledore Cove, both enjoyed cooking. However, other than Gorski's grandmother's marinara recipe, they had to come up with recipes for all of their products on their own.

"We knew what we like and we both love good food," said Garstka. "We wanted to come up with good products."

The result is a line of salsas that range from the spicy Four Pepper to the zesty Black Bean and Corn to the sweet tanginess of the Cranberry Salsa. Each is distinctly different in not only taste, but color and texture. There's also an Appledore Cove line of jams and jellies that includes flavors from a classic Wild Blueberry to the unique Spiced Tomato. Down the road, the duo says there will be mustards and chutneys, as well as other sauces.

"We challenged ourselves to get into a test kitchen until we came up with something we loved," said Garstka.

All of the recipe development and actual production cooking takes place in the kitchen at Goldi's Deli on Penhallow Street, thanks to the generosity of owner Jerry Goldfarb. Working after the restaurant closes, the men spend about 16 hours a week cooking and the rest is on the road, marketing and delivering Appledore Cove products. In two months, they've persuaded 14 stores to carry their products - even getting a request from a New Jersey store to carry the food - and plan to have 20 lined up by the end of the month.

While Appledore's Sweet Basil Marinara won't hit store shelves until later this year, Garstka and Gorski debuted eight products in June at Market Square Day, selling 18 cases from a booth on Congress Street. At the Bow Street Fair, they sold even more, running out of products at their booth. Forced to rush to their homes to get more and label jars on the spot, the pair sold out their entire inventory before the day was over.

Although getting the product line out - "We brought out the entire product line all at once, Garstka says - in time for Market Square Day meant staying up until about 4 a.m. beforehand to finish labeling jars and conquering worries the public wouldn't like the food, the pair says it was worth it.

"We're hugely pro Portsmouth, pro New Hampshire," Garstka said, adding that the company is a member of New Hampshire Stories, the state's product identity marketing organization. "We wanted to put Portsmouth on the map as far as specialty foods go."

Gorski and Garstka have big plans for Appledore Cove, including eventually opening their own commercial kitchen and production facility. And they want to do it in Portsmouth, a commitment the pair made to themselves even when they were just dreaming of starting a business.

"We want to grow here," said Garstka, adding that when it comes time to hire employees, they want to offer a workplace that is family friendly and fun for workers.

The pair has already visited Portsmouth Middle School to talk to students about their business and what it's like to be an entrepreneur.

"We love talking about our company. This isn't brain surgery. When you do something you love, it's not drudgery," said Garstka.

They've also extended their business to include using local companies for everything from banking to insurance to their logo design. Appledore Cove also relies on local suppliers for ingredients, like Golden Harvest in Kittery.

All of the ingredients in Appledore Cove's foods are fresh and do not contain preservatives, said Garstka and Gorski. That does contribute to the price of the items, which range from $5 to $8.

Already, said Gorski, Appledore Cove is starting to cover its costs, but the pair predicts it will be a while before they see any profits to share in.

"At some point, we'll be making a living. We don't know when," said Garstka.

"Money isn't everything. It's about going out and doing what you love. Money will come," said Gorski.

Her heart's in the game

By Ken Stejbach

Staff Writer - Portsmouth Herald, Portsmouth, NH

2/26/99

EXETER - Kayla Gorski said she was a little disappointed, after waking up from heart surgery, to find out she couldn't play for the Exeter High School girls basketball team against Salem tonight.

That was Wednesday afternoon, after four hours of surgery at Exeter Hospital. She brightened considerably when she found out the game had been moved to Monday.

"Mom said it's up in the air, but I think I'll be all right," said Gorski, a 16-year-old Exeter resident.

Gorski is planning on playing, anyway. Nothing seems to stop Exeter's sophomore guard.

Last Tuesday she played for Exeter against Pinkerton Academy on her 16th birthday, enjoying a career-like game with 10 points and five assists. That's despite having to play in short spurts because of what Gorski thought was exercise-induced asthma, a condition she said she's had since she was in fourth grade.

During the game, she was wearing a heart monitor that she pressed to record an EKG when her heart raced, which it had been doing lately. She pressed the record button on the device connected to her chest twice during that game, the second and third times she had pressed the button that week.

The day after the game, when she visited a cardiologist to learn the results of the week-long testing, she learned that she had a condition called Wolff-Parkinson-White Syndrome (WPW Syndrome). Basically it meant Gorski had an extra electrical pathway in her heart, a condition she now believes she has had since birth. And it needed to be corrected.

It was tough sitting out last Friday's game against Trinity. Equally tough sitting at the scorer's bench during Tuesday's big victory over Portsmouth.

Gorski called the play-by-play of Wednesday's surgery:

She arrived at Exeter Hospital at 8:30 a.m.

Gorski laughed about the "little gown" they gave her to wear. After she was hooked up to an IV, and the nurses and her surgeon, Dr. Bruce Hook, explained the procedure and made her feel at ease, "I was wheeled down to the room," she said.

"I was nervous for nothing really."

What she remembers from the period right before the surgery is having 30-odd patches on her body and felling her shoulder jingle up and down after having a catheter placed into her arm. After feeling a second catheter being placed up through an artery in her groin, she remembers getting sleepy and dozing off.

The next thing she knew she jumped awake after having one of those dreams where you feel you're falling from a cliff.

She said what the surgeon did, basically, was to burn the heart tissue to seal off the pathway _ between the atrium and the ventricle _ that was causing her heart to beat irregularly.

She might have been tired Wednesday night when she went home, but she said other than being a little dizzy and sore, she felt "all right" yesterday morning.

She even found it much easier to climb a stairway at her house. For a change, she wasn't winded.

"She's a totally different person today," said her mother, Donna.

Now, she and her doctors are not so sure about the idea she has had exercise-induced asthma since fourth grade.

"There were signs of it, but not enough to justify it," Gorski said. "This could actually clear up what we thought was asthma."

Gorski will be evaluated again on Thursday of next week, when doctors will tell her everything, she said.

Basketball is "by far" her favorite sport, though she also plays field hockey and softball for the Blue Hawks.

She began playing when she was 5 years old. Before coming to Exeter, she lived in Epping. She played for Epping High School's junior varsity basketball team as an eighth-grader.

Athletics, she said over a week ago, played a large factor in her family moving to Exeter.

"I just want to play so badly," Gorski said, referring to getting back on the basketball court.
